

Telemarketers avoid responsibility for violations by failing to include Caller ID information. This is especially a problem for abandoned predictive dialer calls.

I estimate I get at least ten abandoned calls per week. if Caller ID were mandatory on both the part of telemarketers and persons who create the phone systems, it would be far easier to enforce abandoned call violations.

The regulations should also make it more clear as to the circumstances as to when a private right of action is possible. Right now, I don't know if I can sue for failure to send a copy of a no-call policy, and if so, when the claim arises.
